

THE ULTIMATE GUIDE TO AUSTRALIAN RESUMES

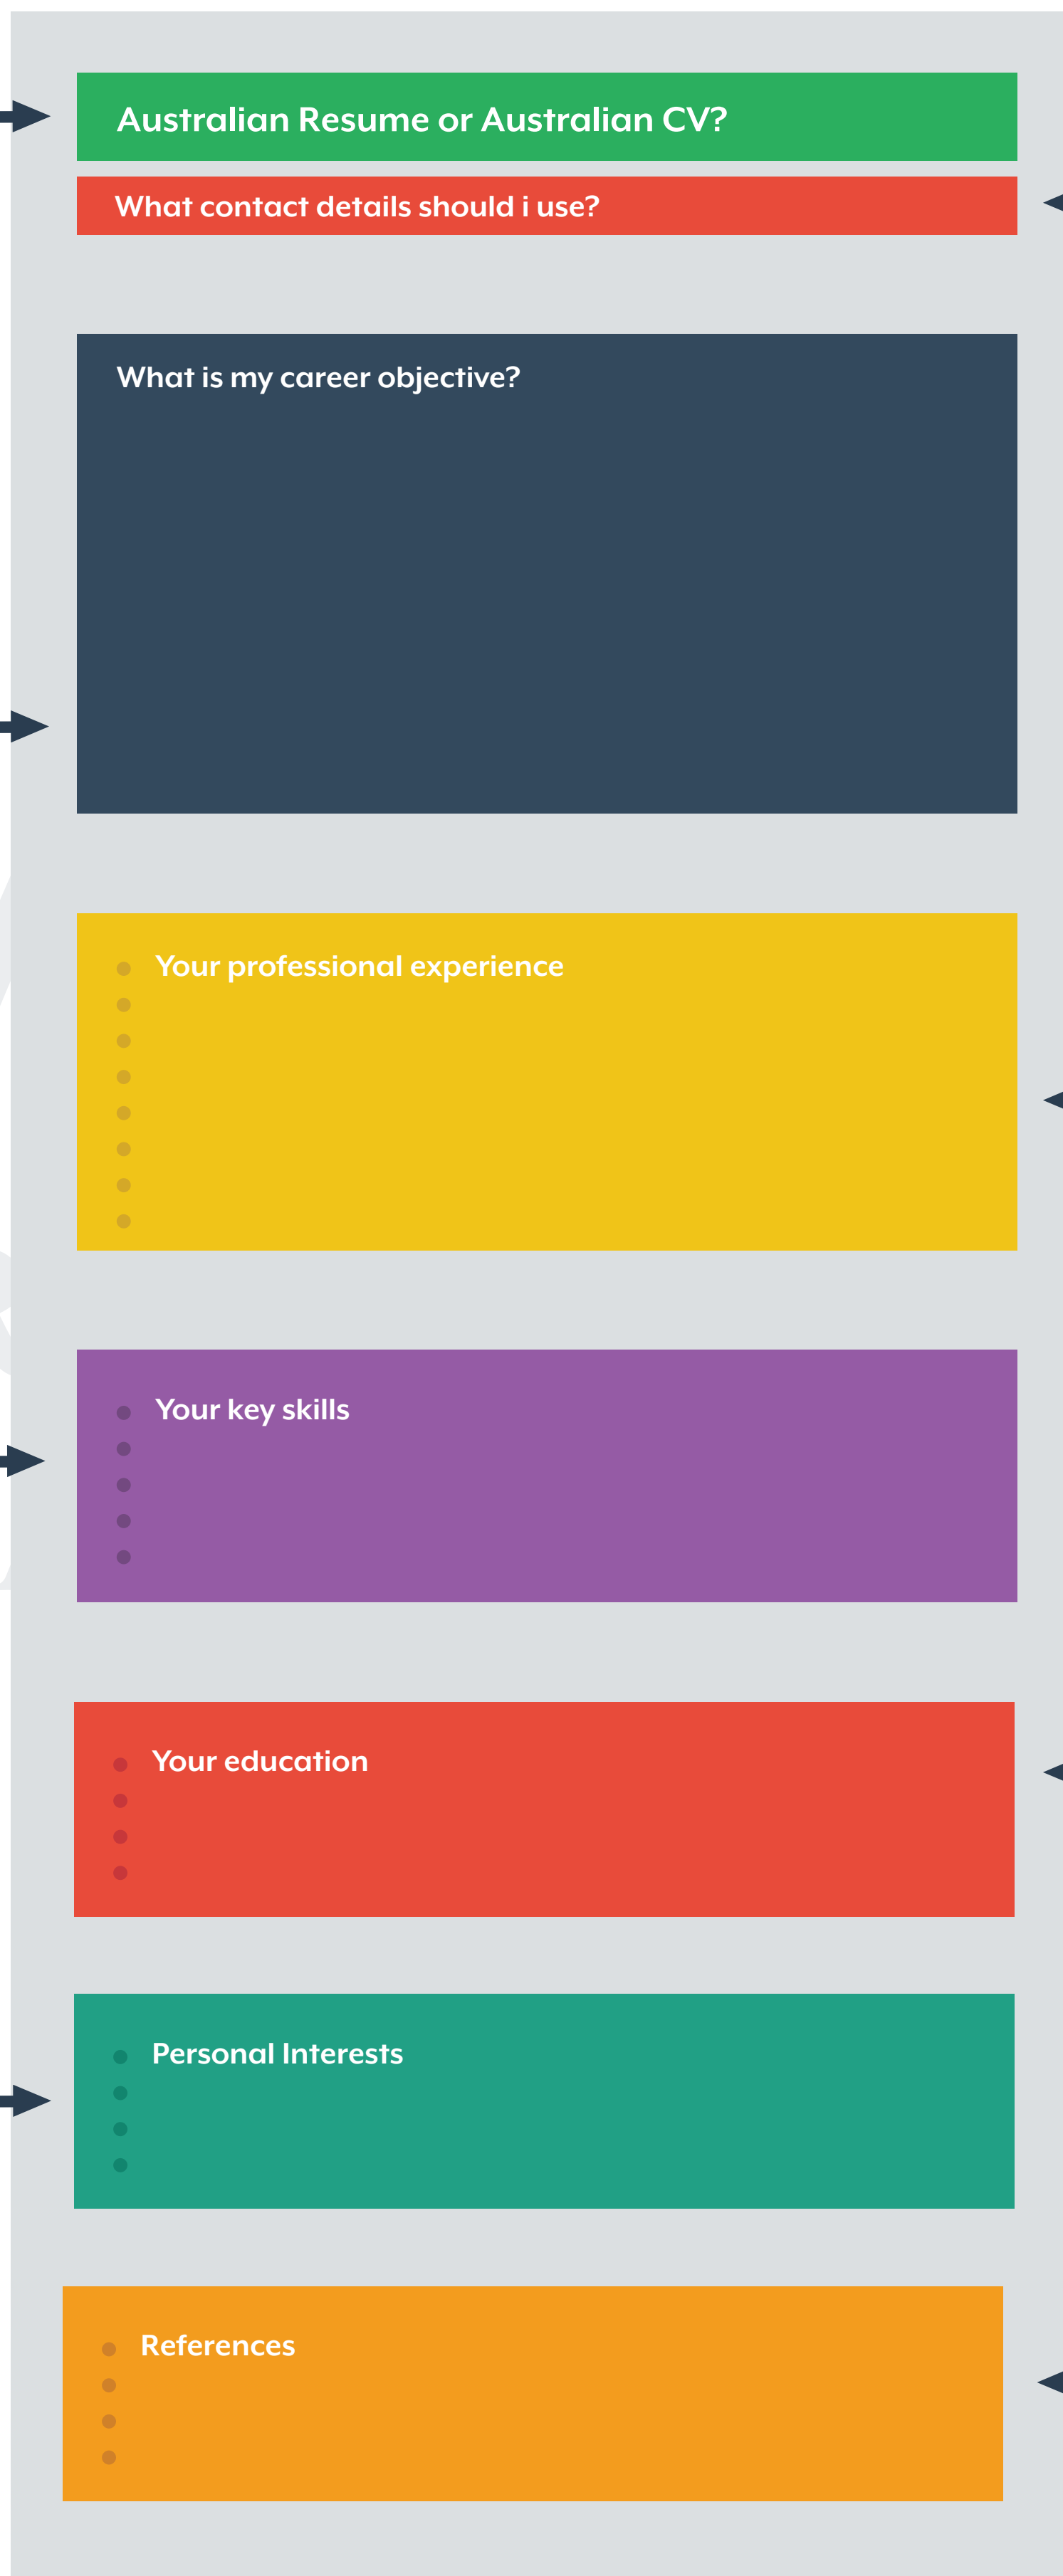

An Australian Resume can be quite different to many other resumes or CVs. Technically speaking there is a difference between a CV (Curriculum Vitae or "Course of Life") and a resume. A CV is usually used to provide a record of your academic and professional achievements while a resume is a document that you would give an employer to show your work history. It really is a summary of your work experience and/ or job-related achievements. In Australia the word commonly used to describe either CV or resume, is simply resume.

In this part, you should write about what you would like to do in your future career. Be as clear as possible about this. It does not need to be long. The HR manager or recruiter needs to see immediately why you are applying for this job and what you can bring to the table.

Here you can list the skills that you will bring to the position or career you are applying for. You can add personal skills as well as technical skills.

Here you can give more information about yourself to help the employer better understand what motivates you, what your personal skills and strengths are and how they will help you become a valuable new team member.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Q. How long should my Australian Resume be?

A. An Australian Resume can be quite long in comparison to UK or USA resumes but it should not be longer than 4 pages. A graduate position should roughly cover 1-2 page, mid-level manager or professional should cover 3-5 pages and a senior level manager or executive can have a resume between 3-5 pages long.

What Format should my Australian Resume be in?

A. There is no one-stop solution but generally speaking, you want to stay with the following order:

Contact Details

Career Objective

Skills

Professional Experience

Education

Technical Skills/Personal interests
